The delegation from Massachusetts was as follows: Oaleb Davis and David Sewall at large, and the belownamed by districts: L. Samuel Phillips, Jr.; 2. Walter Spooner; 3. Francis Dana; 4 Moses Gill; 5. Samuel Phillips, Jr.; 2. Walter Spooner; 3. Francis Dana; 4 Moses Gill; 5. Samuel Phillips, Jr.; 2. Walter Spooner; 3. Francis Dana; 4 Moses Gill; 5. Samuel Henshaw; 6. William Shepard. There was no opposition to the election of Washington in 1792, the only contest being on the second name, but Mr. Adams was elected both terms. In 1789 the convention, or college, was composed of ten states, and sixty-nine electors voting; and in 1792, 132 electors voted from fifteen states. The agitation of party politics is 1796 made the election a very close one, and the sixteen states sent a full vote of 138 electors. Adams was elected President, receiving seventy-one votes to sixty-eight for Jefferson, the Republican leader, who was made Vice-President. Four years later the vote was a tie (73) for President, between Jefferson and Aaron Burr, Republican candidates, and for the first time in the history of the Constitution the election was thrown into the House of Representatives, which was strongly Federalist. The state of South Carolina, with eight votes, carried the day for the Federalists in the electoral college, against eight votes, carried the day for the Fed oight votes, carried the day for the Fed-eralists in the electoral college, sgainst Adams and Finckney, New England cast a solid vote (39) for Adams, and, with one exception, in Khode Island, for Pinckney. After a bitter contest of six days, in which each state could vote for one candidate, either Jefferson or Burr, the former was elected President on the thirty-six ballot, by the following vote: For Jefferson. Four years ago four National Conventions were held—the Republican, Democratic, Greenback and Probibition The latter met in Cleveland May 17, and nominated Rev. Green Olay Smith, of Kentucky, and R. T. Stewart, of Onto. The Greenbackers held their Convention in Indianapolis the same day, and nineteen States were represented. The Republicans met at Cincinnati June 14, and Hayes was nominated on the seventh hallot, receiving 384 votes to 381 for Blaine and 21 for Bristow. William A. Wheeler, of New York, was nominated as Vice President. The Democratic Convention was held June 27 at St. Louis, and a result was respect on the sepond ballot, when the vote was: Titlen, 535; Hendricks, 35; William Allen, 54; Hancock, 58, and 6 scattering. Mr. Hendricks was given second place, and this year the parties will meet as usual and place in nomination the standard-bearers whom they expect can can lead them on to victory.

THE ELECTURAL COLLEGE.

The ideas on Which It was Based—Recerd of its melaga—The Electoral Commission—General Tables for Reference.

The election of President and Vice-President by colleges of electors chosen in each State was first proposed in the Constitution by James Wilson, a delegate from Pennsylvania. It was adopted after a prolonged discussion, and was regulated by an act of Congress, March 1, 1702. From this time to 1824, the electors were generally skeps by the State Lacislances and 184 for Titlden.

The next party of which we have record was formed during the panic of 1837, when the Democrats became divided on the feasibility of President of the President of the President of the States and Henry Clay, of Kentucky, was unanimously mominated. There was no oposition to the nomination of lackson in the Democratic ranks for a section of the National Convention at Baltimore, in 1832, and they made presidential nominations and polled over 62,000 votes. In 1848 the Whig party refused to adopt any platform, and were no more ready to become an anti-slavery party than the Democrats were to become a pro-slavery organization. New York sent two delegations to the National Convention of 1835 at Baltimore, the National Convention of 1835 at Baltimore, the National Convention of 1835 at Baltimore, the National Convention of the latter party at Eastimore, in the party ever since.
